ABSTRACT

Using a variety of learning activities and primary sources, elementary and secondary students investigate family and community history and ethnicity. The major goals of the units are to provide factual information about immigrants to America from about 1820 to 1920 and to assist students in investigating immigrant history and heritage in their families and communities. The user's guide provides introductory information on how to use the series and background information about immigration. A brief description is given on the influence of immigrants on America and is followed by a discussion on how and where students gather and interpret information. Content topics and processes used in the activities are described along with a scheme for recording and evaluating student progress. In addition to the user's guide, the series is composed of four units each for two levels--one for grades 4-8 and one for grades 9-12. These units, available only from the publisher, are classroom-oriented and emphasize gathering and interpreting information, valuing strategies, group sharing and discussion, activities for research projects and class field trips, and individual student research in family ancestry and community. To use the materials in the classroom, both the user's guide and units for either level are needed. (Author/JR)

Preface

The IMMIGRANT STUDIES series consists of four activity units and this guide.

IMMIGRANT STUDIES has these two major goals:

1:

to provide organized factual information about immigrants to America during the great movement from about 1820 to 1920 and

to assist students in investigating immigrant history and heritage in their families and communities.

Chapter 1, "Introduction to IMMIGRANT STUDIES," begins with a brief description of how immigrants have influenced life in America and follows with a discussion of how and where students gather and interpret information. This chapter is a useful orientation to the series and should be read carefully before beginning the activity units.

The four IMMIGRANT STUDIES units — ORIGINS/THE JOURNEY, AMERICANIZATION, CULTURE and ACTION PACK are described in Chapter 2. A statement of purpose is given for each unit.

Chapter 3 describes the content topics and processes used in each activity in the four units for both Levels I and II. Each unit consists of a folder containing the student activity sheets. The parts and kind of information found on the unit folders and activity sheets are illustrated. This chapter can be skimmed over initially and then read in more detail as information is needed to begin specific activities.

Chapter 4, "Evaluating Student Progress," describes a scheme for recording and evaluating completed student activities.

The appendices will be useful as you work through the four IMMIGRANT STUDIES units.

The activity descriptions can help you decide which units and/or which activities you wish to use. Read the background information for each unit before starting activities in that unit. Reference lists may be useful to students doing special projects.

INTRODUCTION TO Immigrant Studies

1 Chapter

The Influence of Immigrants on American Life

The impact of immigrants on the history and sociology of the United States has been profound. In a sense immigrants have both made and changed this country.

Since 1820, the year the United States started recording immigrant statistics, some 42 million people have immigrated here. During the forty years between 1892 and 1932, twenty-three million people came, and in 1907, alone, one million arrived in America.* There has never in history been another such continuous mass movement of people.

Previous to 1820 American society had fit a White, Anglo Saxon, Protestant description almost completely. Voluntary and forced immigration (Black Africans) created a new diverse multi-ethnic society. Some of the diversity was lost in the Americanization process as immigrants tried to fit into the American mainstream. But in spite of the melting pot idea and efforts to Americanize the foreigners, many old country ways have been retained. The pot never really melted. Perhaps it never will for there is a growing interest in ethnic heritage, family and community history and "old country" ways of living and doing things.

Many Americans can find immigrants in their own not-too-distant family history, and many can find some ethnic customs which have been retained over the generations in their families and which have influenced their lives. This immigrant heritage has been a source of shame for some families and a source of pride for others.

Getting at History through Immigrant Studies

The IMMIGRANT STUDIES series provides students with the means for investigating family and community history and ethnicity. Classroom activities in the series provide information about events in immigrant history which students interpret through discussing, decision making, simulations, and various other strategies. Other activities begin in the classroom and then carry over at home or other places in the community where students can gather information about immigrant history. This information can be found in public places such as archives, historical societies, court houses, churches and cemeteries. Information can also be found in attics and cellars of homes; in family Bibles, photo albums, old trunks and old books. These sources of raw, undigested information are often referred to as primary sources. Primary sources play an important role in getting information about immigrants and in investigating immigrant heritage for two reasons.

* America is used here and throughout to refer to the United States.

INTRODUCTION TO IMMIGRANT STUDIES

- 1 Much of this information is not available from any other source.
- 2 Their use can help students develop confidence and skills for gathering and interpreting information.

The ACTION PACK unit gives specific helps for where and how to search for primary source materials in public places. The following are examples of primary source materials found by students and teachers in an immigrant studies class.

THE FOUR Immigrant Studies UNITS

Immigrant studies consists of four units. The first three, ORIGINS/THE JOURNEY, AMERICANIZATION, and CULTURE are classroom oriented and emphasize gathering and interpreting information, valuing strategies, and group sharing and discussion. The fourth unit, ACTION PACK, is a collection of out-of-classroom activities and resources for researching family and community history. The parts of ACTION PACK may be used as needed with other IMMIGRANT STUDIES activities and for students' individual research projects. The first three units are sequential and could be implemented as a course with ACTION PACK activities intersperse where appropriate. However, each unit is complete and may be used alone or as part of some other course of study.

Included with each unit is a 34" x 22" poster composed of photos and primary source materials relevant to that unit. The posters are intended for classroom display and for sources of information for certain activities in the units. Each poster comes in two parts which should be fastened together.

Three important notes:

- 1) IMMIGRANT STUDIES should be implemented as it best fits your teaching program and environment.
- 2) IMMIGRANT STUDIES activities are intended to be flexible to allow student to pursue interests and ideas for new projects.
- 3) If IMMIGRANT STUDIES is to be a vehicle for creating or enhancing interest in family and community history, it must be both rewarding and enjoyable.

A photo from each unit poster and statements of purpose for each of the four units are shown on the following pages.

ORIGINS/THE JOURNEY

The United States was settled by immigrants — people who came from other countries seeking permanent residence. Immigrants came from many countries and for many reasons. During the 19th and early 20th centuries, immigrants poured into this country in record numbers. The purposes of this unit are to help students:

- 1) identify immigrant's origins,
- 2) explore reasons for emigrating,
- 3) learn about conditions on the journey to America,
- 4) learn about what immigrants faced as they entered this new land,
- 5) begin to investigate their own ancestry and heritage.

AMERICANIZATION

Americanization is the process by which immigrants exchanged some of their old ways for new "American" ways in order to fit into the American way of life. Some immigrants became Americanized quickly while others retained their native language and customs for many generations. For most immigrants the Americanization process was difficult.

The purposes of this unit are to help students:

- 1) study the problems immigrants faced in the Americanization process,
- 2) examine their own attitudes toward people who are different from themselves,
- 3) examine patterns of change from one immigrant generation to the next,
- 4) look for patterns of change from one generation to the next in their own families.

CULTURE

Culture is the sum total of ways living built up by a group of human beings, which is transmitted from one generation to another. Although most immigrants brought few belongings with them to America, they brought a wealth of customs, ideas, words, and ways of doing things. Many of these survived the Americanization process and are so ingrained in the American culture that their sources are forgotten.

The purposes of this unit are to help students:

- 1) study the customs of ethnic groups in their own state,
- 2) identify immigrant contributions,
- 3) investigate the ethnic settlements in their own state,
- 4) explore stereotypes they have regarding various ethnic groups.

ACTION PACK

The ACTION PACK unit of IMMIGRANT STUDIES is process oriented. It provides students with activities and resources for doing out-of-classroom investigations of people, places, and events of the past.

Many of the activities in the first three units of IMMIGRANT STUDIES are meant to involve students with family or community historical research. ACTION PACK provides techniques and resources helpful for carrying out further research. The purposes of this unit are to provide students with techniques for:

- 1) conducting oral history interviews,
- 2) carrying out genealogical searching,
- 3) collecting data from their community,
- 4) interpreting data from their community.

In addition, the resource cards provide students with sources of historical information at the local, county, state and national levels.

Immigrant Studies

ACTIVITIES

INTRODUCTION

There are forty four IMMIGRANT STUDIES activities; twenty-two in Level I and twenty-two in Level II. The activities in each unit are sequential in content and, used together, could be the basis for a course of study. However, each activity is complete and one, or a few, may be used alone or as a part of some other course of study.

You can adapt these activities to the needs of your class. Your students may become very involved in family research and want to delve into extensive genealogical research, or they may find some aspect of community research exciting and want to do a series of oral history interviews. It is important to be flexible in the use of the activities and to give encouragement and help to those students with interest in a particular aspect of immigrant history and heritage. It is necessary to set aside a special place in the classroom where student-gathered papers, records, photos and artifacts can be safely displayed. The unit posters should be displayed also because for some activities students use the posters as sources of information.

Each activity has preparatory material for you and an information and/or data sheet for the student. The format for the activities will be detailed in a later section of this chapter.

In each activity students deal with some content relative to immigrant history. They use a variety of strategies and instructional processes to deal with this content. In some activities they read background information and try to simulate the decision-making process an immigrant family experienced. In other activities students read accounts and descriptions of immigrant's lives and then write their impressions.

Following are some examples of strategies used on the student activity sheets.

ASTORIA One

Reacting to Ethnic Groups

Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow.

For many years, the people of the United States have been reacting to the different ethnic groups that have come to live here. Some people have been very kind and helpful to the new people, while others have been very mean and hateful. This is because the new people have different customs, languages, and ways of life than the people who were already here.

One of the first groups of people to come to the United States were the Native Americans. They had been living here for thousands of years and had their own customs and languages. When the white people came, they often treated the Native Americans very badly. They took their land and their resources, and they often killed them. This was because the white people did not understand the Native Americans and their ways of life.

Other groups of people who came to the United States were the Irish, the Italian, and the Chinese. They also had different customs and languages than the white people. Sometimes they were treated well, but sometimes they were treated badly. This was because the white people did not understand them and their ways of life.

Today, there are many different ethnic groups living in the United States. We should all try to understand each other and treat each other with respect and kindness. We should not be afraid of people who are different from us.

ASTORIA Three

Everyday Life

Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow.

Everyday life for many people in the United States is very different from what it was in the past. This is because of the many changes that have taken place in our society. One of the biggest changes is the way we live. We now live in a more urban and suburban area than we did in the past. We have more cars, more houses, and more people living in the same area.

Another big change is the way we work. In the past, many people worked on farms or in factories. Now, many people work in offices or in service jobs. This is because of the changes in the economy and the way we produce goods and services.

There are also changes in the way we think and feel. We now have more freedom of thought and expression than we did in the past. We are more open to different ideas and ways of life. This is because we have more information and more contact with people from different parts of the world.

These changes have made our lives very different, but they have also made them very interesting and exciting. We should embrace these changes and make the most of them.

ASTORIA Five

Customs

Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow.

Customs are the traditions and habits of a particular group of people. They are often passed down from generation to generation. Customs can be very different from one group to another, and they can change over time.

One of the most common customs in the United States is the way we celebrate holidays. For example, we celebrate Christmas, Thanksgiving, and Independence Day. These holidays are celebrated in different ways by different groups of people, but they are all important to us.

Another common custom is the way we dress. In the United States, we often wear casual clothes like jeans and t-shirts. In other parts of the world, people might wear more formal clothes like suits and dresses.

Customs are an important part of our culture and identity. They help us to understand each other and to appreciate our differences.

ASTORIA Two

Ethnic Settlements

Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow.

Ethnic settlements are areas where people from the same ethnic group live together. They can be found in many parts of the world, including the United States. Ethnic settlements often have their own customs, languages, and ways of life.

One of the most famous ethnic settlements in the United States is Chinatown in New York City. It is a small area where many Chinese people live and work. They have their own shops, restaurants, and schools. They also celebrate their own holidays and customs.

Other ethnic settlements can be found in many other cities, including Los Angeles, San Francisco, and Houston. Each settlement has its own unique character and history.

Ethnic settlements are an important part of our multicultural society. They help us to understand and appreciate the different cultures that make up our country.

Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow.

ASTORIA Four

Immigrant Contributions

Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow.

Immigrants have made many contributions to the United States. They have brought with them their own customs, languages, and ways of life. They have also brought their skills and talents, which have helped to build our country.

One of the most famous immigrants in the United States is Abraham Lincoln. He was born in a small town in Kentucky and grew up to become the 16th President of the United States. He is famous for leading the country through the Civil War and for signing the Emancipation Proclamation.

Other famous immigrants include Benjamin Franklin, who was born in England and became one of the Founding Fathers of the United States, and John F. Kennedy, who was born in Ireland and became the 35th President of the United States.

Immigrants have made many other contributions to our country, including in the fields of science, art, and sports. We should all be proud of the contributions that immigrants have made to the United States.

ASTORIA Six

Stereotype

Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow.

Stereotypes are generalizations about a group of people. They can be based on race, ethnicity, religion, or other characteristics. Stereotypes can be helpful in some cases, but they can also be harmful. They can lead to discrimination and prejudice.

One common stereotype is that all people from a certain country are lazy or dishonest. This is not true. People from all countries have different strengths and weaknesses. We should not judge people based on their country of origin.

Another common stereotype is that all people of a certain race are violent or aggressive. This is also not true. People of all races have different personalities and temperaments. We should not judge people based on their race.

We should all try to avoid stereotypes and instead try to understand each other as individuals. We should not be afraid of people who are different from us.

Culture

Level 1

Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow.

Culture is the way of life of a particular group of people. It includes their customs, languages, and ways of thinking. Culture is an important part of our identity and helps us to understand each other.

One of the most important aspects of culture is language. Language is how we communicate with each other and share our ideas. Different groups of people have different languages, and this can make it difficult for them to understand each other.

Another important aspect of culture is customs. Customs are the traditions and habits of a group of people. They can be very different from one group to another, and they can change over time.

Culture is a complex and fascinating subject. We should all try to understand and appreciate the different cultures that make up our world.

THE IMMIGRANT STUDIES ACTIVITIES

The Student Activity Sheet

Within each folder there is a reproducible student activity sheet for each activity. You will need to make copies of those activities you plan to use for your students. Because the activities vary greatly, there is no standard format for the student activity sheets. However, there are generally three parts:

directions

tells students how to proceed with the activity guidance or background information may be a word definition, a simulation, or historical information necessary for the activity place for student response may be a chart, a set of questions, completions, or space for an illustration or a story.

Following is an example of a completed student activity sheet:

Evaluating

STUDENT PROGRESS

4 Chapter

Whether IMMIGRANT STUDIES is used for long-term student involvement such as a mini-course or whether several activities are integrated into existing programs, there is usually a need to evaluate student progress. The processes used and products produced in the activities make student performance visible and measurable. Because students may become involved in several activities and complete them at varying rates, an activity record for each student is helpful. Student performance can be recorded on an Activity Profile Sheet similar to the one shown below.

IMMIGRANT STUDIES Activity Profile Sheet

ORIGINS/THE JOURNEY	Date Completed	S	U	Special Projects	Comments
Activity 1 Lineage Chart
Activity 2 Irish Potato Famine
Activity 3 Decision at the Port
Activity 4 The Journey
Activity 5 Statue of Liberty
Activity 6 Ellis Island

Activity 1 Generation Chart

EVALUATING STUDENT PROGRESS

The Activity Profile Sheet becomes a record of work completed over a period of time for each student. Each activity is judged either satisfactory or unsatisfactory using criteria such as degree of completeness, validity of responses or conclusions, use of resources, etc. Some teachers have used the number of satisfactorily completed activities to determine a grade or level of performance for each student. For example, completing any ten activities over a ten-week period could be an "A" level performance.

Of course, there are other performances which can be used in evaluating student progress. Some of these include individual student participation in class discussion, willingness to suggest and pursue new ideas for projects, and scores on class quizzes and final exams. These performances also could be recorded on the Activity Profile Sheet.

If this system for evaluating student performance is used, it is important to discuss the system with students before beginning the activities. Students should understand:

- 1) the criteria to be used for evaluating their individual activity products.
- 2) which performance factors will be used to calculate their final grade, if one is given. For example, it should be explained to what extent activity products, class participation, special projects, etc. will contribute to a final grade.
- 3) if long-term projects are part of the requirements.

The fact that IMMIGRANT STUDIES helps students investigate local history often leads to new questions and activities that may differ from those in the units. For example, indexing a local cemetery may be of interest to a student as well as being very useful to the community. A long-term commitment of this type may not fit your criteria for evaluating student performance and thus could be disruptive to your plans. It is important to decide how to deal with divergent interests before beginning the activities in the units. Activities of local interest and significance can often be integrated with or substituted for those already described in the units.

BACKGROUND INFORMATION FOR Immigrant Studies

One of the goals of IMMIGRANT STUDIES is to provide students with factual information about immigrants to America from approximately 1820 to 1920. This information has been categorized to correspond with the three major topics: ORIGINS/THE JOURNEY, AMERICANIZATION, CULTURE. The information in this chapter is meant primarily for your use but may be given directly to students if you deem it appropriate. For certain activities you may wish to read excerpts from this background information to students.

Origins/The Journey

AMERICANS ARE IMMIGRANTS

All Americans are descendants of immigrants. The Indians came earliest, from 50,000 to 13,000 B.C. Spanish explorers came during the 1500's. English settlers first came during the 1600's. Blacks from Africa were forced to immigrate to this country from the 1600's until the 1800's. Seventeenth century America, although predominantly Anglo-Saxon, had Scots, Irish, French, Spanish, Jewish, Germans, Dutch, Swedes, Danes and Finns.

From 1820 when immigration statistics were first recorded until 1921 when the first quota act was passed, over 30 million immigrants came to America.

The following chart describes the two main periods of immigration dealt with in IMMIGRANT STUDIES.

Period	Nationalities of Immigrants to America
1820-1880	Northwest Europeans: English, Irish, Welsh, Scots, Belgians, French, Dutch, Germans, Swedes, Danes, Finns, Norwegians, and Swis.
1880-1920	South and Southeastern Europeans: Chinese, Japanese, Austrians, Hungarians, Jews, Bulgarians, Greeks, Turkish, Italians, Polish, Rumanians, Serbians, Slovaks, Czechs, Armenians, Syrians, also Mexicans, Russians, Finns, Lithuanians, and Latvians.

WHY THEY LEFT THEIR HOMELANDS

The emigrants left their homelands because they were dissatisfied with conditions there. They emigrated to escape religious persecution, war, political unrest, famine, poverty, over-crowding, and harsh class systems which restricted their right to own land, make laws, and hold power. Many sought wealth and glory which, they were led to believe, would be theirs in America.

BACKGROUND INFORMATION

English people came seeking freedom and a better, richer life. The potato famine in Ireland, followed by an unusually harsh winter in 1846, caused a quarter of a million Irish people to leave their homeland. Crop failure in 1846 and failure of the democratic revolution in 1848 were responsible for bringing hundreds of thousands of Germans to America. Scandinavians on their small farms could not farm as efficiently as Americans whose products were being sold all over Europe. A scarcity of good farm land and the practice of handing down land only to the eldest son made it impossible for many people to own land. Russians found conditions under the Czar and his cossacks unbearable. They sought freedom in America. Poles left their homeland to avoid fighting in German, Russian or Austrian armies. Italians chose emigration over starvation. Chinese left over-crowded Canton to work for low wages building railroads in Western United States. Mexicans left unsettled conditions.

WHY AMERICA?

The immigrants came to America wanting religious, political, and economic independence. They came for land, for education, for social equality and for opportunities in America. They read of the rich soil, the growing cities, the new industries with modern machines. They read of equality — no princes or dukes and no class distinctions between factory workers and executives, rich and poor. They read of electing one's own governing officials and of feeling equal to them. They dreamed of being respected, regardless of occupation.

American states advertised for immigrants. For example, in 1858 when Minnesota became a state, it needed people to farm the land and to work in the growing industrial cities. Minnesota established the position of commissioner of immigration. This official sent representatives of the state to New York to lure immigrants to Minnesota.

Many "guides" for immigrants were published in the middle and late 1800's. Some were realistic, practical descriptions of topography, climate and development in an area. Others were glorified accounts of utopian places with pure water, fertile soil, beautiful forests, wild fruits, and a healthful climate.

Events such as the gold rush of 1849 led many immigrants to believe that America was a place lined with gold where they could get rich quickly. Some guides described the entire United States; others were written for individual states or ethnic groups. Railroad promotion guides informed prospective immigrants of the wealth of opportunities in America along the lines of American railroads. Railroad companies offered reduced fares to immigrants who would go west and help to settle railroad lands. Ethnic or religious organizations sometimes formed colonization programs to assist immigrants who would settle in their area.

THE JOURNEY TO AMERICA (1830's to 1930)

For the immigrants of the 1830's and 40's the trip from Liverpool to New York by sailing ship took from thirty to ninety days; forty days was the average length of a journey. At that time sailing ships were the only option and they were at the mercy of winds and tides and often unskilled crews. These ships were as small as 300 tons and were subject to hazards of shipwreck, mutiny, and fire. Generally immigrants either purchased cabin passage which was reasonably uncrowded and comfortable or steerage passage which was very crowded and uncomfortable.

Some immigrants who couldn't afford even steerage passage made the journey in Canadian lumber or fishing vessels which normally sailed back to America with no cargo. These ships were even less suitable for human passengers than other sailing vessels.

Immigrants who could afford steerage passage in the part of the ship below the main deck spent most of the forty days and nights in an area approximately 75 feet long, 25 feet wide, and 5 feet high. The ship carried 400 to 1,000 passengers, and often rats, too. The passenger quarters were dark, smelly, and either sticky hot or damp and cold. From five to nine immigrants shared individual cubicles 10 feet by 5 feet by 3 feet high, in the steerage area.

There were water closets in steerage, a couple of cooking stoves, and tables on which each family could prepare its meals. People got daily water rations but had to add vinegar to conceal the stench of the water. They carefully rationed out their food for fear of running short. Some crew members were known to sell food to passengers or trade food for immigrants' possessions.

A generous captain might allow passengers short visits to the deck in fair weather. So, one never did.

Disease was ever present on shipboard. Crowded, dirty conditions in steerage resulted in outbreaks of cholera, dysentery, yellow fever, smallpox, measles, and "ship fever." On one ship 500 passengers died before reaching America. The average mortality rate was ten percent. Bodies would be wrapped in sheets and dumped overboard. Body lice were common in the crowded dirty conditions, and they spread rapidly among passengers. It was inevitable that there would be other problems on board. People quarreled over minor disagreements, thefts occurred, and people were homesick and depressed. In addition, there were often several nationality groups on a ship, and communication between them was difficult or impossible.

Although most of the emigrants from Europe traveled by steerage, some could afford first or second class cabin passage. These passengers were often admitted to the United States without the lengthy examination at Ellis Island, in spite of the U.S. laws which required all aliens to pass the examination before entry. After 1860, conditions improved somewhat for steerage passengers. Steamships took over the high class passenger business and left the sailing vessels competing for customers. Rates came down and conditions on the ships were improved. When European countries started building steam powered merchant ships in the 1870's, emigrants could buy a steerage passage plus food for just over $10.00 and they could make the trip from Europe in ten days or less. Later, ten to twenty thousand ton steam ships could make the trip in a week.

ARRIVAL IN AMERICA

Land was a welcome sight after the long, grueling journey. Immigrants took their first steps on American land at one of seventy different federal immigrant stations in the U.S. Latin Americans came to New Orleans, Savannah and other southern ports. Mexicans came to Texas, New Mexico, Arizona and California. Chinese and other Orientals came to San Francisco, Seattle and other Pacific ports. Some Europeans came to Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, but a huge majority came to New York. The early 19th century immigrants who arrived in New York came to Castle Garden, an immigrant station operated first by New York State and later by the federal government. By 1890 a larger facility was needed, and Ellis Island was chosen as the site. A reception building, a dormitory, a small hospital, a restaurant, a baggage station and a power house were built on the island. Between 1892 and 1932, sixteen million immigrants waited in line, had their bodies inspected for vermin and disease, passed the questioning and were admitted to America at Ellis Island.

Ellis Island received seventy percent of the twenty-three million immigrants who entered America during those forty years. During its peak year, 1907, Ellis Island processed one million immigrants, an average of 5,000 per day or two per minute. Ellis Island is significant not only for the numbers of people processed there, but also because it represented for most immigrants a first view of America, a first encounter with Americans. Here, because of poor health, poverty, or American immigration quotas, some suffered the heartbreak of deportation.

Some had relatives or friends to greet them and help them get settled. Others had to fend for themselves. They had to change their money to American dollars, find housing and jobs or secure transportation west. They did all of this in a strange bustling city where everyone spoke a foreign language. Because of their inability to speak English some were cheated out of their savings. Some met discrimination in getting jobs, and once hired, were given the worst jobs for the lowest pay. Fortunately many immigrants found people who spoke their language and were willing to help them. Churches tried to help and various ethnic groups formed immigration services for that purpose. But many of the problems immigrants faced upon their arrival were but a taste of what they would encounter during the process of Americanization.

Americanization

WHAT IS AMERICANIZATION?

Americanization or assimilation is the process by which immigrants exchanged some of their old ways for new "American" ways in order to fit into the American way of life.

Some immigrants became Americanized quickly and gave up completely their old-country ways. Others retained their native language and customs for many generations, and in some cases never abandoned them.

Some ethnic groups were more reluctant than others to change and Americanize. The number of like immigrants in an area and the attitudes of the ethnic churches toward services in the native tongue were probably factors in their reluctance to change.

PATTERNS OF AMERICANIZATION

Americanization often followed a pattern of change from one generation to the next. First generation immigrants (the ones who actually came over from the old country) often strongly resisted the new ways. Second generation immigrants (first born in the new land) started to shed old ways and begin the assimilation process. By the third generation, there were more new customs and affiliations being practiced than there were old. By the fourth generation the Americanization process was almost always completed and "new ways" were firmly established. However, with many fourth generation immigrants there is a desire to become aware again of the value of their ancestral culture.

Four generations. 1915.

REASONS FOR AMERICANIZATION

First generation immigrants to America often settled near relatives or others from the same homeland. In their daily lives, they could communicate in their own language or dialect. They had schools, churches and sometimes newspapers which maintained the language and culture of their homeland. Their cultural ties became less strong among second and third generation immigrants. People left the ethnic settlements for more education and higher paying jobs. To prosper they had to learn English and something of the American economic and political systems.

BACKGROUND INFORMATION

Immigrants were often discriminated against in education, in the job market and in social activities. To speed their assimilation process many immigrants changed their "foreign" names to simple English-sounding ones and practiced English until they could speak it with no accent. Some gave up old-country customs — food, clothing, crafts, music and social activities — all traces of their foreign ancestry.

PROBLEMS OF AMERICANIZATION

The giving up of old ways often led to conflicts between children and their foreign-born parents who resisted change for themselves and feared such rapid and dramatic changes in their children. Sometimes parents were rejected by their Americanized children and grandchildren. This rejection caused frustration and loneliness for the parents. While the children often suffered tremendous guilt feelings for their treatment of their parents, they felt it necessary to their own success in the American mainstream. Sometimes they were frustrated by the feeling of phoniness, which resulted from pretending to be someone they weren't.

For many years, Americans encouraged immigration. It was necessary to have people to work in the factories, to build the railroads, and to homestead the farm land. Immigrants were willing to work at low paying jobs and they tolerated poor working conditions. Immigrants who homesteaded the land were willing to suffer hardships and to work in primitive conditions. Second generation immigrants were less willing to accept poor wages and second class status. They wanted an equal place in American society. American laborers began to resent these new foreigners for taking jobs and power.

Immigrants continued to pour into America in increasing numbers. Ethnic groups had their own organizations and newspapers. The cities were more and more crowded with ethnic ghettos.

Americans began to fear these groups who were mostly strangers to them. Racist attitudes grew up. The belief was that immigrants not of Anglo-Saxon or Teutonic ancestry were innately inferior.

The Know-Nothing Party in 1854 tried to keep Roman Catholics and non-citizens out of government. The Workingmen's Party in 1877 feared Chinese immigrants. By 1920 the Ku Klux Klan had five million members. These and many other organizations favored the restriction of immigration. They worked for the passage of literacy requirements which they thought would restrict all non Anglo-Saxon races.

The first World War brought increased fears of "foreigners" abroad and within the country. There were crusades to force Americanization on all aliens. The motto, 100% Americanism had the goal of making all aliens either become, or declare their intentions of becoming United States citizens. The government, education departments, industries, women's federations, social and welfare institutions and private citizens all participated in the campaign. Some of the campaigners worked on the premise that aliens had to prove their Americanism, others had humanitarian concerns and tried to help immigrants in the process of Americanization.

Culture

WHAT IS CULTURE?

Culture is defined as the sum total of ways of living built up by a group of human beings, which is transmitted from one generation to another.

The study of culture is a necessary part of immigrant studies. Groups of people who had shared a common culture in the old country were becoming dispersed and settled among people from many different cultural backgrounds in the new country. The new environment forced many immigrants to give up some of their old ways. Americanization was the process of shedding parts of one culture and taking on parts of another culture. What first generation immigrants passed on to their children was likely a mixture of old country customs along with those new country customs which they thought necessary to their survival here. Second and third generation immigrants perhaps passed on more American ways than old ways. Yet many old ways did survive and even become part of the American culture.

WHERE IMMIGRANTS SETTLED

With the homestead act, the United States offered free land in the west to those who would build on it and live on it for five years. Many immigrants went west to farm. Swedes, Finns, Norwegians and Germans started farms in Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Illinois. Irish, Scots, and English populated the eastern states. Poles, Russians and Czechs settled in New England and the Middle West. Armenians and Syrians farmed in California. Some Irish crowded into New York and Boston. Others went west to work on the railroads. Jews also went to the cities.

Pennsylvania mines drew workers from Czechoslovakia, Lithuania, and Latvia. Illinois, Wisconsin and upper Michigan drew the Cousin Jacks from Cornwall, England. Many Bohemians became cigar makers in New York City. Italians settled in the cities and retained their culture. Chinese came to California and settled "Chinatowns." They worked on the railroads or at any kinds of jobs available. Japanese, Hindus, Filipinos, Sikhs, and Malays also settled in California. Many American cities still have a "Little Poland," a "Little Italy," or a "Chinatown." There are small towns today which are almost exclusively Finnish or Swedish or German or Czech.

DEGREE OF AMERICANIZATION

As the American population grew and as people become more mobile, there was more interaction between different ethnic groups. As they learned to speak the same language communications improved between them. Interaction and intermarriage between people of differing ethnic backgrounds merged the customs and traditions and languages of the groups.

BACKGROUND INFORMATION

Not all immigrants became Americanized to the same degree. While many immigrant families became almost completely Americanized over several generations, some resisted and hung on to their language and traditions as strongly as possible. They continued to live in ethnic settlements, spoke their native tongue and celebrated their native festivals in America.

For many immigrant families Americanization occurred but a few of the traditions were maintained. For example, a fourth generation Italian woman from Brooklyn speaks no Italian, attended public schools, and married a non-Italian, but she enjoys cooking the Italian foods her grandmother and mother always made. The whole family celebrates Christmas with a traditional Italian dinner.

In another instance, a couple who are both third generation Finnish immigrants, speak English and live in a non-Finnish community, but they built a Finnish sauna in their backyard. An American woman of Swedish descent who teaches her children Swedish straw craft is yet another example.

CONTRIBUTIONS OF IMMIGRANTS

As the immigrants became Americanized, America changed too. But the ethnic groups did not blend in a melting pot and come out American. The concept of an American changed to include parts of many ethnic cultures. Many things which are considered American today had their beginnings in this country with some immigrant group. Spaghetti, sauna, pumpernickel, polka, strudel, soy sauce all were introduced to this country by immigrants. The Christmas tree was German in origin. Immigrants brought to American many other customs, ideas, words, and ways of doing things. Many great Americans were immigrants. Albert Einstein came from Germany. Henry Kissinger was born in Germany. Alexander Graham Bell came from Scotland. President John F. Kennedy's ancestors came to America from Ireland.

Dancer at ethnic festival. 1975. Minnesota Historical Society.

REVIVAL OF ETHNIC PRIDE

Today there is a renewed interest in the customs and traditions of the ethnic groups that have helped make America what it is. Colleges are offering courses in ethnic studies; people are searching for information about their heritage and learning about the customs of their immigrant ancestors. There is a renewed interest in ethnic crafts, food, and festivals. Ethnic groups are forming organizations to preserve their heritage. Slogans such as "Black is Beautiful," "Kiss me, I'm Italian" support ethnic pride. Afro haircuts and Sioux headbands are worn proudly. Finns claim to possess "sisu." Irish Americans celebrate St. Patrick's Day. One's ethnicity is not kept secret now, it is a source of pride.

Because in the Americanization process people did not always forget their past, there are people who know the crafts, the languages, the foods, the customs of their immigrant ancestors. These people with their knowledge can provide interest and diversity for Americans today.

Action Pack

WHAT IS ACTION PACK?

ACTION PACK provides four specific activities in which students investigate the past. Each activity includes the techniques necessary for carrying out that particular kind of investigation.

1. Historical Clues in Your Community	events places
2. Cemetery Study	people events
3. Genealogical Searching	people
4. Oral History	people events places

ACTION PACK activities and resource cards are meant to be used throughout IMMIGRANT STUDIES. They may be appropriate during other IMMIGRANT STUDIES units or for students doing individual research projects.

The following chart shows the relationship between ACTION PACK and activities in ORIGINS/THE JOURNEY, AMERICANIZATION, and CULTURE.

Activity Descriptions

LEVEL ONE

B Appendix

Origins/The Journey

ACTIVITY 1

LINEAGE CHART...(family research)

Students trace their own lineage as far back as they can in order to determine:

- 1) the place of origin of their ancestors,
- 2) when their ancestors came to the United States,
- 3) The meaning of "generation."

This activity will be introduced in class and the information gathered outside of class over two to three weeks.

ACTIVITY 2

IRISH POTATO FAMINE...(decision making)

Students read an account of conditions in Ireland during the 1840's. In small groups they simulate a family's decision on whether to emigrate. The group lists reasons for and against emigration and then tries to reach a decision. Group decisions are reported to the class and discussed. This activity can be done during one to two class periods.

ACTIVITY 3

DECISION AT THE PORT...(small group simulation)

Students simulate a decision which many emigrants had to make when arriving at their port of departure with too many possessions for the tiny space allotted to them on the ship. Given a list of possessions brought to the port by a family, students decide what to take and what to leave behind. In small groups students discuss and revise their list and then present it to the class for discussion. Later students discuss a list of belongings actually taken by emigrants. This activity can be completed during one or two class periods.

THE JOURNEY...(writing a diary)

Students read a description of the journey and then each writes a diary that might have been written by an emigrant on a sailing ship in 1850. This activity can be done in one or two class periods.

ACTIVITY DESCRIPTIONS LEVEL ONE

ACTIVITY 5

THE STATUE OF LIBERTY...(listing emotions)
After reading accounts of arrival in America, students try to list the emotions the immigrants experienced once the Statue of Liberty was in sight. This activity can be completed in one class period.

ACTIVITY 6

ELLIS ISLAND...(creative writing)
Students get information about immigrant processing at Ellis Island. They then write a story about immigrants portrayed in a photo presented in class. This activity can be completed in one class period.

Americanization

ACTIVITY 1

THE MELTING POT...(family research)
Students discuss the "melting pot" idea and then find out how many nationalities they personally represent. This activity can be introduced in class and the information gathered at home.

ACTIVITY 2

THE GENERATION CHART...(family research)
Students gather information from parents and other relatives to look for patterns of change from one immigrant generation to the next. This activity may be carried on over one or two weeks.

ACTIVITY 3, 4, 5, 6

THE STORY OF GEORGE M....(a case history)
Students read the story of George M., a second generation immigrant, to become aware of the problems faced in the Americanization process. This story is used as the basis for the following four activities.

ACTIVITY 3

CHANGING TO FIT IN...(priority ranking)
From a list of items which immigrants often had to leave behind, students rank items from easiest to hardest to give up. This activity can be completed in one class period.

ACTIVITY 4

FOREIGNER...(dealing with feelings)
Students list words to describe George's feelings when peers make fun of his "foreign" ways. Then they complete a sentence to give reasons for the behavior of George's peers. This activity can be completed during one class period.

ACTIVITY 5

SAMENESS...(creative writing)
Students express their ideas about how it would be if everyone were the same. This activity can be completed in one or two class periods.

ACTIVITY 6

PREJUDICE...(writing and discussing)
Students read and discuss the meaning of the word prejudice, and try to relate it to "The Story of George M." This activity can be completed in one class period.

Culture

ACTIVITY 1

REACTING TO ETHNIC GROUPS...(free association)
Given a list of ethnic groups, students write their first response to each name to reveal their ideas and stereotypes about each group. This activity can be completed in one class period.

ETHNIC SETTLEMENTS...(community research)

Students locate ethnic settlements on a map of their state. Small groups of students research one ethnic group to find out when and where these people settled in the state. This activity can be carried on over one or two weeks.

ACTIVITY 3

EVERYDAY LIFE...(reading accounts and writing about old photos)

After reading accounts of immigrant experiences and looking at a collection of photos depicting various aspects of immigrant life, students write their impressions. This activity can be completed in one or two class periods

ACTIVITY 4

IMMIGRANT CONTRIBUTIONS...(listing and discussing)

Students list things which originated in other countries and then discuss their effects on American culture. This activity can be completed in one class period.

ACTIVITY 5

CUSTOMS...(identification and sharing)

Students research the customs of one ethnic group and then share their findings with the class in a variety of ways. This activity can be carried on over one or two weeks.

ACTIVITY 6

STEREOTYPES...(free association)

Given the same list of ethnic groups as used in Activity 1, students again write their first response to each name and compare the ideas they now have about each group with those expressed in Activity 1. This activity can be completed in one class period.

ACTIVITY 1

HISTORICAL CLUES IN YOUR COMMUNITY

Students take a walk in their community and look for clues to the age, ethnicity, and history of the community. The trip will take a minimum of two or three hours. Some students may wish to return to a site.

- 2) when their ancestors came to the United States
- 3) the meaning of "generation"

This activity will be introduced in class and the information gathered outside of class over two or three weeks.

ACTIVITY 2

IRISH POTATO FAMINE...(decision making)

Students read an account of conditions in Ireland during the potato famine of the 1840s. In small groups they simulate how a family decided whether or not to emigrate. The group lists reasons for and against emigration and then tries to reach a decision. Group decisions are reported to the class and discussed. This activity can be completed in one or two class periods.

ACTIVITY 3

DECISION AT THE PORT...(small group simulation)

Students simulate a decision which many emigrants had to make when arriving at their port of departure with too many possessions for the tiny space allotted to them on the ship. Given a list of possessions brought to the port by a family, students decide what to take and what to leave behind. In small groups discuss and revise their list and then present it to the class for discussion. The teacher presents a list of things actually brought by immigrants. This activity can be done during one or two class periods.

THE JOURNEY...(writing a diary)

Students read a description of the journey and then write diaries that they might have written had they been emigrants on a sailing ship in 1850. This activity can be completed in one or two class periods.

Students read the story of a second generation immigrant to become aware of the problems faced in the Americanization process. Then from a list of items which immigrants often had to give up, students rank items from easiest to hardest to give up. This activity can be completed in one class period.
